Project cancelled The plan was first revealed in August, when Blizzard's director of StarCraft II and WarCraft III, Alex Irvine, spoke at GDC 2011 in San Francisco. As reported by Eurogamer.net, Irvine revealed that the project was intended to allow players to create and play custom maps as a kind of portal for game mods, although developers also hoped to use it to test new game features. However, with StarCraft II: Heart of the Swarm on the horizon, Irvine admitted the project had been "put on the back burner." More from GameSpot: GameSpot's review of StarCraft II: Heart of the SwarmCAMBRIDGE, Mass. — The last time Alex Ovechkin won the league MVP award, a funny thing happened. Ovechkin's former captain became the first Russian to lead the NHL in scoring. Even better, the trophy was awarded by a Canadian named Sidney Crosby, the face of the league whose franchise Ovechkin had just led to the Stanley Cup. It didn't take a genius to know that Ovechkin's 1,085-point season was more historic than the one Crosby won, but the franchise thing never got mentioned. Ovechkin was a 10-point third-place finisher for the league's best team, and Crosby took home his hardware in a repeat of a gold medal performance at the Sochi Olympics. Ovechkin was something special, but that didn't mean he was the best player in the game. So why is it that, on the eve of Ovechkin's first career nomination for the Hart Trophy, his name is being repeatedly linked to Crosby for MVP? Because Crosby led the league in points (128), because Crosby led the league in goals (54), because Crosby led the league in power-play goals (22), because Crosby led the league in scoring shorthanded (seven points) — and because the Penguins have won the regular season. He is playing with the highest scoring team in the league, with players capable of taking over the game at a moment's notice. Crosby has carried this team on his back for the last month and a half and has done so without his best friend. The Penguins have been without Marc-Andre Fleury since March 9.
